How would you like to live in a house that never needs painting? That way a lot of time for your car that will be good for 100,000 miles?

And many other startling innovations may be commonplace in the comparatively near future. The story is told in a 10 1/2 News and World Report article based on information supplied by Charles E. Johnson, head of a nonprofit organization known as the Midwest Research Institute.

Mr. Johnson says that electronic devices will do away with the need for paint. Electronic ovens will do the cooking as much as 10 times faster than conventional ones. Electronic washing machines and other appliances will be so cheap that they can be bought as cheaply as a trip to the grocery store. He takes about 10 as it is expected to be in a year or two.

In the coming time, your car will probably be powered by a gas engine. A relatively simple type of engine will be used. It will be much simpler than the present engine. It will be much simpler than the present engine. It will be much simpler than the present engine.

And he gets home safe and unscratched, but in his wake the very young drivers who lack experience and confidence, the very old drivers who can't see too well and whose reflexes are slower, and the women drivers who are more timid and nervous have had a rough time. And some of them don't make it home.

The answer is courtesy.

From the Suburban List, Essex Junction, Vermont: The federal program for construction of national defense highways is probably the biggest engineering project of all time anywhere in the world. While the federal government is appropriating $1 billion dollars for road improvement to be spent during the next 15 to 18 years that is only a part of it.

The different states will have to chip in about five billion dollars. Even that is not all. The different states are going to have to spend billions of dollars of their own money for road improvement during the next 10 years. When all this is added up it will amount to over 100 billion dollars.

Mr. Kimball believes not only in a car design, but possibly in incorporating electronic control equipment into highways which will prevent a car from getting into the wrong lane. And the tires will not only run the 100,000 miles, but will be truly blowout and puncture proof.

The solution to the traffic problem will lie in parking at the edge of cities, then going on by other means such as moving sidewalks.

The frame will be revolutionized. Plastic will do away with the need for paint. Electronic ovens will do the cooking as much as 10 times faster than conventional ones. Electronic washing machines and other appliances will be so cheap that they can be bought as cheaply as a trip to the grocery store.

Clothing new fabrics, made of synthetic fibers, will be available. Mr. Kimball thinks will lead to more rural industrialization with many plants out in the smaller towns, making all sorts of products.

So it goes. What is all this up to? Is it just greater luxury and convenience in living but an enormous increase in leisure time? That will work to the advantage of what may be broadly termed the modern industry.

Finally, Mr. Kimball said: The single difference to our technical progress in the structure of computer, and trained scientists. This means that opportunity is wide open for a people young people who have scientific careers.

TELL US YOUR PROBLEM

BY JOHN and JANE STRICKLAND

IN 1915 the United States Government retired an unit from the Navy for service a young man twenty-eight year old who had been born with ambition. He loved to work, he loved travel, he loved knowledge, and he loved his country. His lack of fitness was due to a broken bone in his foot, suffered when playing football.

His problem was how to work toward his goal when he had been dismissed from the service where he might have had a chance. He might have even become an Admiral in the Navy if his chance hadn't been snatched away from him.

But there loomed over the horizon a new threat—flying. World War I had demonstrated the possibilities of the airplane. That was it. Aviation, that didn't require strong bones in his legs. Strong hands were more important—and a good head. Now he could travel. He would go North—maybe to the Pole. A high flying ship, the Shenandoah, offered him a chance. Then the Shenandoah was destroyed in a test flight. He appealed to the Government, and although his father was a Senator of the United States, no favoritism was shown him. The government refused his first request; that he be allowed to make test flights to ready a plane for crossing the Atlantic Ocean; then he made an appeal to be allowed to go with Amundsen to the Arctic Circle. "No," said the government. "We are sending only unmarried men; you are married."

But he wouldn't give up. He had a problem but he would solve it. Through what medium? Perseverance! So he persevered. Since then he has not only flown across the Atlantic, but over all the other oceans. He not only got to the North Pole, but to the South Pole several times.

Today his title, conferred by the United States Government, is Admiral Richard Evelyn Byrd. In the name of any other American Admiral better known to you?

TODAY'S Meditation

THE WORLD'S MOST WIDELY USED DEVOTIONAL GUIDE

Read Colossians 3:23-25. Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord. (Colossians 3:23.)

ONATIUS of Antioch, a great saint and martyr, once said, "Let your stewardship define your work." We would have to search far to find a better statement of the relationship of stewardship to vocation.

On often, however, we reverse the statement in practice; we let our work define our stewardship. Perhaps this is the weakness that we Christians need to correct most of all.

As Christians, we have also the responsibility to engage in such work as we can call upon God to bless. Our responsibility also is to manifest the Christian spirit in our work. When we are at work, the spirit that is in us such that we work heartily, as serving the Lord.

THE HOT GET-AWAY

By William L. Roper

JIMMY HANSEN was sitting in the front seat of his Uncle Oscar's taxicab, listening to the radio calls from the cab company's control center, when the shooting started.

Jimmy's first impulse was to report the shooting to the man at headquarters, the way Uncle Oscar did. But he quickly rejected the idea, as he remembered that Uncle Oscar should be in the cab instead of at the all night hamburger stand on the corner getting a cup of coffee. Besides Jimmy was not supposed to be in the cab. The fact that Uncle Oscar was teaching him to drive a taxi was their own secret, an arrangement strictly without company approval.

Suddenly Jimmy saw a thin, emaciated man dash out of a dimly lighted liquor store across the street, a smoking gun in his right hand. A short, pudgy man pursued, firing wildly.

The fleeing man twisted around. His gun spurted fire. The short man screamed, pitched headlong on the pavement under a street lamp. Increasing his speed, the gunman raced toward the taxicab, where Jimmy sat as if frozen, unable to move.

"Get going," shouted the gunman. The man's black, deepest eyes gleamed crazily from his thin, white face.

As the cab raced along the street, Jimmy listened tensely for the wall of a police siren. Surely someone besides himself had heard the shots. It would take a few minutes, though, for the chase to get under way. Jimmy shivered at the thoughts of what such a chase might mean—police bullets whistling around his head, possibly a bullet-blinded tire and the car swerving off the road out of control. But if the police did not stop them, what then?

He recalled a recent newspaper photograph, showing a taxi driver's body slung over the steering wheel of his cab on a lonely country road. A cold chill raced up and down his spine.

About two miles out of Centerville, on the Freeway, the gunman spoke again.

"Slow down and turn right at the next cross-roads," Jimmy followed orders. Even in the darkness, he recognized the road. It was the one, on which the dead cab driver had been found two months previously.

His fingers reached out for the two-way radio switch. But before he could touch it, he felt the gun barrel pressing against his chest.

"Don't try any tricks, punk," the gunman growled. "I'd hate to have to blast you while the cab's speeding."

"Don't you want to know if the State cops are on your tail?" Jimmy asked.

"Okay," the gunman said. "Turn it on."

Jimmy manipulated the switch, but the radio speaker gave forth only a hum.

"Guess it's burned out," Jimmy said. "But we ought to be in South Hillsboro in a matter of minutes, and you can't grab another car there. The cops will be looking for this cab, since my Uncle is sure to report it stolen."

They were approaching Hillsboro from the south when the red lights of the road block flashed on ahead of them, and two motorcycles roared out into the road behind the cab.

Jimmy shoved down the brake pedal and clawed desperately for the gun with his right hand. The cab skidded, slammed into a police car. It was all over in a moment.

As the officers snapped handcuffs on the sky, one of them slapped Jimmy on the shoulder.

"Good work, lad," he said. "It hadn't been for the radio connection over the cab's radio, we wouldn't have had a where to set up the road block."

LAFF OF THE WEEK

"Sometimes I feel sorry for husbands, but I don't believe sympathy should interfere with extravagance!"

Q—Which is the directing Federal Agency in cases of natural disaster? A—Whenever the President declares a major disaster exists the Civil Defense Administration is the directing federal agency. The President transferred this authority to CDA from the Housing and Home Finance Agency in January, 1953. Action is taken under the Federal Disaster Act passed by the 81st Congress.

Q—Does the United States belong to the Organization for Trade Cooperation?

A—No. The United States Chamber of Commerce recently conducted a poll of its membership with the result that a majority favored participation by the United States, but a two-thirds majority which is required for U. S. C. of C. action, was not obtained. A bill for U. S. participation is pending in Congress.

Q—Which is the oldest national park?

A—Yellowstone National Park is the oldest and also the largest. The National Park Service has a $15,500,000 for construction of visitor facilities in the Park.

Q—Has a water pollution bill passed this Congress? What are main features?

A—A bill has been passed, but had not been signed by the President as this is written. It has approval of the Public Health Service, and an important feature is that it provides for federal contribution of $50 million a year for 10 years toward cost of sewage treatment plants, limited to 30 per cent of the cost, or $250,000 whichever is smaller. It improves procedures for Federal/State action on interstate pollution and boosts grants for studies and training and research on sewage problems.

Q—Will the Bureau of Public Roads handle the new $33.9 billion highway bill?

A—Presumably. However Senator Albert Gore, author of the original bill, has introduced a bill which would set up an independent Federal Highway Commission of three members to handle the highway building program.

GRASS ROOTS OPINIONS

Marion, Iowa, Sentinel: "This writer used to work a 48 hour week on the section for $18. Now a section man gets this much in little over a day. The union can get much credit for this. But all of us need to study the problems involved to see that everyone gets his fair share, but to avoid killing the goose that lays the golden eggs."

St. Louis, Mo. Labor Tribune: "We are inclined to agree with Mr. Arthur Patzer, youth secretary of the Seventh Day Adventists Columbia Union Conference who recently blasted popular song writers who are cashing in on the current religion revival. The religious 'rock and roll' we have been getting via the airwaves and juke boxes is as uncouth as it is uncalled for and makes a mockery of all real spiritual values."

Crackdown on Killers!

100 Cities Have Shown Way to Cut Traffic Deaths Through Stepped-Up Enforcement, Get-Tough Drives

The days of winking at drivers who work at the law are coming to an end. The era of coddling traffic lawbreakers soon will be over, it is hoped.

All over the nation many city, county and state police departments are cracking down on flagrant law violators in a determined effort to bring relief in our present national traffic emergency.

Every day, more and more public officials are recognizing that habitual traffic offenders are potential killers and that drastic steps must be taken to protect pedestrians and the careful and law-abiding drivers from these "highway highway menaces."

Last year alone traffic law violations are involved in the deaths of 31,700 of the nation's 23,000 highway victims.

"Fortunately, many of the steps necessary for correction are readily available," said Franklin M. Krenzl, who for 25 years has been director of the traffic division of the International Association of Chiefs of Police.

"We know the term 'accident' is a misnomer," Krenzl stated, "and we know that collisions are caused by carelessness."

"Where there is violation of the traffic laws can be identified as the cause in such an overwhelming number of collisions, it follows that this basic root of evil must be attacked vigorously and be reduced or eliminated if we are to cut our traffic death toll."

"More than 100 cities throughout the country have demonstrated dramatically and conclusively that the best way to save lives in traffic is to deter lawbreakers through stepped up and impartial enforcement programs."

Although law enforcement is essential to the life-saving effort, it is only one of two basic ingredients, said Krenzl, now on leave from his IACP post to head the Transportation Center, Evanston, Ill.

"The other important ingredient is support and acceptance by the public of good enforcement to the point where any driver who gets a ticket fully realizes that the policeman who is writing the summons is exercising the kind of supervision that some day could save the life of the offender's family," Krenzl said.

In each of the cities that have included stepped up law enforcement as part of the official traffic program, the results have been the same—lives have been saved and the accident rate has dropped.

The law enforcement approach is spreading to more cities and to county and state levels. The spread to state levels is significant because more than half of all traffic fatalities occur on roads under the jurisdiction of state and county police departments.

A recent survey shows that governors of 33 states either have launched get-tough drives or are considering such action.

About two years ago Gov. Langley of Washington inaugurated an enforcement drive called the "governor's traffic war." The accident rate in Washington dropped immediately, and it's been estimated that the drive has saved about 175 lives.

Other states have experienced similar success through get-tough drives on violators.

Over one three-day holiday, Illinois traffic killed 47 persons. After Gov. Stratton learned state police had issued only 170 traffic tickets during that three-day period, he stepped up law enforcement over the next three-day holiday by calling out units of the national guard to aid the state highway patrol.

The number of arrests climbed to 1,414, but the Illinois death count dropped to 13.

In one recent month in Vermont, accidents decreased 20 per cent as arrests increased 100 per cent. A drive in 1955 helped Idaho reduce traffic fatalities about 23 per cent.

Gov. Simms of New Mexico credited the state's improved record last year to a "strenuous crackdown on moving traffic violations."

On Memorial Day, Gov. Ribicoff of Connecticut called out 100 national guardsmen and put them in 42 jeeps and three helicopters to help with traffic duty. The governor also decreed suspension of licenses for convicted speeders. The enforcement effort was so successful that not a single accident of any type occurred on either of the state's two main traffic arteries.

Cities and states that have stepped up traffic enforcement have proved that get-tough drives on lawbreakers will work and will produce dramatic life-saving results.

Conservation Farming

in Oxford County

by Douglas L. Marston.

Soil Conservation Service

Seedling trees planted on the Oxford County Soil Conservation District lot in Brownfield last spring are showing good progress. This land was planted with special equipment owned by the Oxford County Soil Conservation District.

About 20 acres will be planted in Brownfield this fall on several pieces of property that were burned over in the forest fire of 1947.

It is still not too late to order trees for fall planting and I would suggest that anyone interested in planting this fall contact the Soil Conservation Service office at So. Paris in the near future. About 100,000 trees have been ordered for planting in the County this fall and there is very little chance that there will be any trees available from the State Nursery for spring planting.

C. S. Barrows & Son of Oxford plan a 400 foot drainage project on their farm for this fall. They have just completed an 800 foot road waterway which has been seeded and made ready for the fall rains. The tile project is in hayland that has an area bothered by side hill seepage. This area has always proved a problem when operating the baler or forage chopper. Mr. Barrows is confident that the tile will solve this problem.

Salisbury, N. C. Post: "Things are really looking up for the Soviet worker. Now he can no longer be thrown in jail for quitting his job.... Under the new labor decrees those guilty of infractions of work discipline will not be hauled into court. Instead they can be fined, fired, demoted or deprived of bonuses and seniority by management. Brand, isn't it?"

IN THE WAR OF 1812, NEW ORLEANS WAS A DEFENSELESS CITY OF 20,000 INHABITANTS. THE BRITISH, JACKSON COULDN'T UNDERSTAND OR SPEAK THE LANGUAGE OF MANY OF THE PATRIOTS, YET HE AND THEY FOUGHT FOR THE RIGHT OF THESE PEOPLE TO BE FREE, INDEPENDENT AND AMERICAN - UNITING RACES, CREEDS AND LANGUAGES UNDER THE MOTHER TONGUE OF DEMOCRACY.

PORK FROM RED POLAND

The goal of expanded world trade is a splendid one. But it would seem only sensible that we should lay the emphasis on trade with our friends, not with our enemies, and that we should also keep in mind the "two-way-street" principle.

The American Meat Institute tells of a rather startling development in the foreign trade field. Last year, communist Poland—an Iron Curtain country dedicated to the destruction of what we regard as free institutions—shipped 13 per cent more canned pork products, especially hams, into the United States than in 1954. These imports totaled some 22 million pounds, with a value of almost $18 million.

By contrast, shipments of canned pork by such friendly nations as Holland, West Germany and Canada all declined by 5 to 21 per cent. Only from Denmark did imports increase—by about 5 per cent.

To top it off, the friendly countries which shipped canned pork to the United States were heavy purchasers of our own meat and other agricultural products, including tallow and hides. But in the case of Red Poland, the value of her purchase of agricultural products of every description from the U. S. was well below $1 million—or less than one-eighth of the value of canned pork she shipped to us.

The moral seems plain. Let's have more world trade—but let's have it with countries which are on our side politically and economically.

Alameda, Calif., Times Star: "The recent successes of American popular musicians who have toured Europe indicate that when our travelers properly typify American life and their fellow citizens, they are understood and welcomed."
